Link to Critical theme: asking questions about meaning	An introduction to philosophical arguments (ontological, first cause and design) and evidence believers may use to rationalise their held beliefs allowing students to begin formulating a range of viewpoints on questions about evidence, proof religious experience, meaning and destiny.	linking philosophical arguments for (unit 1) and against (unit 2) the existence of God through opposing scholars (Christian and atheist) analysing to what extent these ideas can be reconciled or if religion will lose out to science and atheism. An enquiry on personal identity will highlight questions concerning the soul and whether evidence for the spiritual self is reasonable in a scientific world and to what extent this supports the existence of God which will lead to the proceeding units investigation into life after death. By analysing ideas from believers and atheists to rationalise their held beliefs allows students to begin formulating a range of viewpoints on questions about beliefs, meaning, truth, commitment, values, and purpose.	The view that a religious person holds about the afterlife is bound to affect the value given to this current life leading to a question of meaning in regards a sense of environmental responsibility and to what extent humans will be judged on how they have looked after the world allowing students to recognise different answers and reflect on the impact of their own values and commitments to the natural world

Link to Critical theme: asking questions about meaning	An introduction to evidential and philosophical arguments allowing students to consider and respond to questions about the nature of good and evil and the concepts of right and wrong. By analysing ideas from believers to rationalise their held beliefs allows students to begin formulating a range of viewpoints on questions about values and commitments in face of adversity which in turn allows students to begin to formulate an informed response to world events (holocaust) displaying perceived evil	An enquiry into what death and indeed life after death means from sacred texts and contemporary sources allows students to consider their own purpose and meaning. By analysing ideas from believers and atheists to rationalise their held beliefs allows students to begin formulating a range of viewpoints on questions about beliefs, meaning, truth, commitment, values, and purpose.	An investigation into famous British Icons whose success has been guided by principles from their respective held faith demonstrates to students the positive effect of living in a multi faith society. This will give students the opportunity to examine the question of why religion matters and what would be positive or difficult following a faith in the Modern Western community, exploring concepts such as belonging, diversity, meaning and commitment.
